Forecasts indicate seasonal monsoonal moisture will develop and spread northward through Saturday, the weather service says. Expect plenty of sunshine after the morning fog burns off.

The season's first monsoonal moisture will arrive as southerly flow returns to southern California. Expect several rain showers in the mountains, and scattered showers and thunderstorms in the coastal valleys and foothills.

Clouds will dominate the skies through the weekend, and temperatures will remain cooler than normal as high pressure moves into the area.

COLD FRONT COOLING OUT

The cold front that moved through the region last week will bring cooler temperatures through the weekend, with highs in the upper 60s and lows in the mid-50s.

Inland valleys will experience temperatures in the upper 70s, while coastal areas will remain in the low 70s.

Winter storms will continue to bring high winds, with gusts expected up to 60 mph in some areas.

Smoke from wildfires in the western United States will likely continue to affect air quality, but the impacts are expected to be minimal.

There will be a chance of scattered showers and thunderstorms in the mountains and coastal areas, but overall, the weather will be mostly clear.

The average temperature for the week is expected to be around 70 degrees Fahrenheit, with a high of 75 degrees and a low of 55 degrees.

A California man who posted the name of an 18-year-old female victim on social media has been charged with a hate crime.

The victim, 24-year-old Betsy Williams, was allegedly attacked in an Escondido Walmart on Monday.

Williams had shot the woman at the door with a pistol that he had bought online, but a complaint also contains two expenses for “false advertising.”

The complaint also lists a $15,000 settlement for damages to the woman’s car. This issue is expected to be resolved in the coming weeks.
